

Starving and Thirsty, Mango and Tango Rescued from Brink of Death, Owner Charged with Neglect

Mango and Tango were starved, flea bitten and just days away from death when an Ottawa Humane Society veterinarian first laid eyes on them.

The pair was emaciated and covered in fleas when they arrived at the OHS on April 11, brought in by their owner's landlord. They were dehydrated and their ears were covered in mites.

"This is typically what we see when animals are abandoned without food or water for days," said Miriam Smith, OHS inspector. "We were shocked to find out someone was actually living in the unit with the cats when this happened."

Still friendly and purring despite their suffering, the cats were immediately put on IV fluids. Both had a body condition score of one on a scale of one to nine. To put that number into perspective, Charlie the starved Great Dane – who came in weighing 53 lbs., which was less than half the normal weight for a dog his size – had the same body condition score.

Like Charlie, Mango and Tango are now being cared for by a dedicated OHS foster volunteer as they slowly regain their health.

Your support has given Mango and Tango a second chance at a happy life. Without you, they would have had nowhere else to go.

Thanks to you, OHS Rescue and Without you, Mango and Tango would have had nowhere to turn for help. We need your help more than ever.

Investigation Services agents are struggling to end cruelty to animals so Mango, Tango and other animals like them don't have to suffer. The need for support is greater than ever, as the number of investigations has grown by 26 per cent in just two years. The province has recognized this growing need and is now funding part of the work of RIS investigators. Unfortunately, the funding only covers a small portion of the ever-increasing need. While every dollar of that funding will go toward saving animal lives, we still need your help.

Mango and Tango were just days from death when an OHS veterinarian first laid eyes on them.

RIS agents have charged Marie Parise, 54, in connection with Mango and Tango's alleged neglect. She first appeared in court June 26. 🐾

We Need You to Help Orphaned Kittens

I am feeling a lot better about entering into our busy season this year. By busy season, I mean the time of the year, sometime in late spring, when daily admissions of animals rises from a dozen or so to up to 50 animals every single day. We all know it's coming, we plan for it, brace ourselves, and do the best we possibly can for every animal that needs shelter and care, because they have nowhere else to go.

This year, because of you, we are better prepared, especially for the major cat and kitten influx that is the hallmark of the season. You helped us develop a number of new initiatives that we think are going to make a big difference this summer.

Last spring, you helped create our Kitten Brigade, a group of fast-tracked foster volunteers who have agreed to help us over the busy season by taking in multiple cats and kittens who are not quite ready for adoption and can be better cared for in the community. Last year, 43 new foster volunteers came forward and this boost made a big difference in the quality and quantity of care we were able to provide. We identified what worked best last year and are launching the new-and-improved program to help with this spring's wave of cats needing our care.

Your support has allowed us to create a long-overdue position of feline co-ordinator to help us address the many and unique needs of the thousands of cats that need our care and your help every year. One of our outstanding employees, Ashley Hodgins, has jumped into this role with gusto. Ashley already has helped us to identify and reduce the factors that slow down cats moving through the shelter, as moving cats through the steps to adoption quickly helps to ensure that cats remain comfortable and healthy. She has developed plans, protocols and training for staff and volunteers to provide enrichment care for cats in the shelter, also reducing stress and thereby keeping them healthy.

Your kindness allowed Ashley to create a huge initiative launched this spring: Project Orphan Kitten. Orphans are at significant risk for obvious reasons. Without a mother, even older kittens often won't eat on their own. They can lose body heat quickly and die of hypothermia. They need regular socialization to grow up normally. Ashley has researched and developed this great new program with the input of volunteer vet Dr. Julie Burke, who researched best practices in the care of orphan kittens and initiated the development of program materials. Also included is a volunteer training program and manual with all of the procedures to support this ambitious new program. Existing volunteers will receive the required specialized training that they will use to give the close to 200 orphaned kittens we care for every year a much better chance at survival and a forever home.

I hope that you are as excited as I am to see how much your support can make a difference in the lives of the animals that need your help every day. Ashley, and our other amazing staff and volunteers, can only be here for the animals because you are here for them too. 🐾

Lili Caron Motivated by Love of Animals

Lili Caron has been helping animals in our community since 2006 in thoughtful and practical ways: gifts of medical supplies, blankets and litter trays have provided comfort and care to the animals. Lili even contributed to help Breezy find her forever family.

The self-employed translator and artist is the proud and happy mom to two beautiful cats named Prince Charmant and Cendrillon.

Lili has been helping the animals in our community since 2006 in thoughtful and practical ways.

An accomplished painter, Lili has several projects on the go. It is her hope to raise money for the animals through the sale of her paintings.

She trained and ran in the Ottawa Race Weekend in May with a goal to raise $1,000 to benefit the OHS and the animals in its care.

Motivated simply by her love of animals, Lili chose to make the future more secure for them by leaving a bequest in her will to the OHS. The animals thank you, Lili!

For information on how you may leave a bequest to the animals, please contact Greg Beck, manager: legacy giving, at 613-725-3166 ext. 268 or gregb@ottawahumane.ca. 🐾

Ottawa Police Sgt. and Longtime OHS Volunteer Teena Stoddard Helping to Build Brighter Future for the Animals

Ottawa Police Sgt. Teena Stoddard is a hard person to say “no” to. Teena Stoddard – the civilian – is an even harder person to say “no” to.

“There are many different ways to accomplish a goal. If someone says no, it just means I have not found a way which would motivate them to say yes,” she said.

Teena will tell you, and anyone else listening, how proud she is to help animals by donating her time, energy, contacts, and money to give them a second chance.

She recently adopted Kernell, a dog from the OHS, who is already a star attraction in Teena’s circle of friends and with the other dogs and children in Teena’s neighbourhood.

Teena has tirelessly helped Ottawa’s animals for many years – as a volunteer selling raffle tickets at Ottawa Police Services (OPS) and in the community, soliciting businesses for donations for live and silent auctions for OHS fundraising events, marketing the OHS within OPS, and as a donor who helped build a brighter future for the animals with a monthly gift to the Breaking Ground Campaign.

She has also included the OHS in her will “to ensure that future animals will continue to have a safe and secure home and a second chance,” she said.

Teena was instrumental in once again involving Ottawa Police Services with the OHS at the recent FurBall Gala.

“Ottawa is so fortunate that OPS and the OHS regularly partner together to keep our community safe. It was only logical to enlist some OPS officers to help sell raffle tickets at the FurBall – I am proud to say that we raised over $5,000 for the animals.”

Thank you Teena for all of your gifts and

Hundreds of Dogs Locked in Hot Cars This Summer Will Be Saved – Because You Care

The summer heat means OHS agents are racing from call to call to answer that next cry for help from a dog locked in a hot car.

A growing awareness of the danger of leaving pets in vehicles means more people are turning to the OHS for help when they see a dog locked in a hot car.

“People in Ottawa love animals. We’re their first call when they see a dog locked in a hot car,” said Miriam Smith, OHS inspector. “We’re busy but it means we’re saving the lives of animals in need.”

This year’s first call for a dog locked in a hot car came in on May 6. Just two weeks later, agents laid their first charge. They found a Chihuahua whose owner had been playing bingo for an hour. By then, temperatures in the car had reached 40 C. The dog was panting and lying in the backseat when the agent rescued her.

The busy start may mean 2014 is another record-setting season. Last year, you helped us respond to 430 dogs in hot cars – saving many from lifelong injury or even an agonizing death. One of those dogs rescued in 2013 was Bako. An OHS agent found the husky panting, drooling and lethargic after being left in a hot truck on Canada Day last year. The agent rushed Bako to the vet for treatment. Luckily, he recovered but his owner was sentenced to a year of probation and had to pay a $200 fine.

Thanks to you, OHS agents will be there to save the next dog from a hot car. Visit the OHS website to read about the most recent OHS rescues of dogs in hot cars. 🐾

Although legally mandated to enforce the animal cruelty provisions of the Criminal Code of Canada, the Ottawa Humane Society does not receive any government funding or any funding from any animal welfare group to rescue animals in distress and only receives partial funding for investigations. The Ottawa Humane Society relies on donors like you to help perform this essential work in our community.
